CHESTERFIELD COUNTY IN 1800

WALTER KING, JR.

CHESTERFIELD COUNTY IN 1800

Early in the history of South Carolina the state was divided into the counties of Berkeley, Craven, Colleton, and Carteret. Craven County included the territory of the Cheraw Indians, known as the Cheraws Precinct. The County Court Act of 1785 created 34 counties. By this Act the Cheraws territory was divided into three counties--Chesterfield, Marlborough, and Darlington.¹

The county was named for Lord Chesterfield (Philip Dormer Stanhope, 4th Earl of Chesterfield). He was a close friend of George II and his career was closely connected with the reign of this monarch. He was prominent as a politician, and his speeches in the House of Lords were characterized by wit and eloquence; but his life was devoted chiefly to the pleasures of literature and society.²

As late as 1826 three-fourths of the county was a pine barren, fit only for cattle ranges, and most of the river low lands had not been brought under safe cultivation from the freshets. The river lands sold from $10 to $50 per acre, the best up lands from $8 to $10 per acre, and the pine lands from $.20 to $1.50. Cheraw and Chesterfield were apparently the only towns. Cheraw was the chief place of business and consisted of 150 houses and 1,200 or 1,300 inhabitants. Chesterfield had 100 inhabitants, 12 houses, and 2 stores. Farming was the chief occupation, but the county had 8 to 10 distilleries. Also, the county had about 50 merchants, 150 mechanics of every calling, 6 physicians, 20 paupers, 1 blind person, no deaf and dumb, and 1 lunatic.³

According to the 1790 census Chesterfield County had 2,077 White and 921 Negro inhabitants, making a total of 2,998.⁴ In 1800 the population had grown to 3,955 White and 1,148 Negro, making a total of 5,103. This was an increase of almost 60% over the census of 1790.
